

Memory Light & Mini Tap

A glowing keepsake and a tap-to-sign-in guest tool for funeral homes — built around the online obituary you already have live.

Memory Light is a small backlit keepsake — a family photo 3D-printed into a glowing panel, with the person's name and memorial text worked right into the image. Tap a phone on it, and it opens straight to their online obituary.

Mini Tap is the same idea for the guest book table: guests tap once and land on the funeral home's digital sign-in or condolence page — no shared pen, no illegible names.

WHY IT MATTERS — MEMORY LIGHT

For the Family

An online obituary usually gets found once, during the week of the service, then disappears into browser history. A physical object with the photo built into it gives people something to actually keep — on a shelf, at a graveside, in a car. Because it's tied to the obituary, it isn't just decorative — it's a living link back to the full story, photos, and guestbook, any time someone wants to revisit it.

For the Funeral Home

- A new high-margin add-on that sits right next to what they already sell — urns, prayer cards, jewelry
- Makes their existing tribute software feel more valuable — the page becomes something a family can hold
- Zero new workflow: they place an order, you deliver a finished, fully programmed piece

Why the Tap Tag Matters

Guest books at services have three real problems: one shared pen slows the line at the door, handwriting is often illegible, and the paper book itself gets lost or never gets typed up. None of it is dramatic — but every funeral home has lived it. Mini Tap fixes it without asking them to change how they run a service: no new software to buy, no staff training, nothing lost if a guest skips it and signs the paper book instead.

"It's not asking them to change how they do a service — it's just removing the one moment that's always been a little clunky."

THE ONE-SENTENCE VERSION

"It's a photo that glows and remembers — tap it, and it takes you straight to their story."
